

From Bits to Atoms

Physicists use computers, and computers use physics. The historical separation of computer science and physical science masks a much more fundamental reciprocity between bits and atoms. I will present emerging research on turning information into things and things into information, and explore the broader implications of anyone being able to make (almost) anything.